4. Conclusions

It is evident that small and medium sized companies remain vital to the European economy but many of them fail in the first five years; so it is important to ensure the survival of these companies and encourage them to grow. In today's business world, SMEs are competing with a larger number of companies, many of these are multinationals; they have a greater number of staff and a wider pool of skills. So, it is important for SMEs to acquire the relevant strategic skills as quickly as possible to remain ahead of the competition by using latest technologies such as Cloud Computing.
